

Reconciliation service for U.S. Imports

When complete shipment information is not available at the time of entry, Livingston's Reconciliation service helps you manage the process.

Submitting detailed shipment information to Customs & Border Protection (CBP) prior to your imports into the United States can, in many situations, be a challenge.

CBP designed the Reconciliation program because it recognizes that some shipment information is simply not available until cargo has been delivered. Therefore, approved importers can compliantly "correct" or reconcile missing or estimated information after their shipment has entered the United States.

Our Reconciliation service

Flexible, simple to use and entirely electronic, Livingston's Reconciliation service allows you to effectively participate in and manage reconciliation—whether Livingston or another customs broker generated the import entry.

As a first step, your dedicated Livingston service team will work with you to develop the right options for your reconciliation needs. Your team will

- Provide, discuss and help you decide which data options you will choose to "flag" or identify your reconciliation shipments (e.g., by part numbers, manufacturers or even all entries)
- Once your reconciliation data is identified in the system, your service team will create a customized report to track any entries or information outstanding for reconciliation. The system will also alert you of upcoming final submission deadlines.

As soon as we receive your reconciliation information, we will prepare and file your final entries with CBP.

How you'll benefit

- Flexible options. Every business is unique, so we customize our reconciliation service to meet your specific needs.
- Improved compliance. Gain time to ensure accurate information is being submitted to CBP, thereby reducing risk while increasing your overall corporate customs compliance.
- Save money. Reduce, or even eliminate, individual post-entry corrections and their processing costs.
